FOREWORD

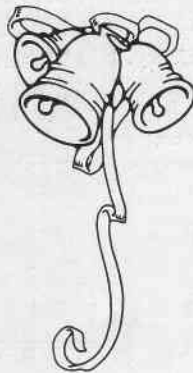

EITHER time nor money has been spared by the Hamilton Fire and Police Department in making this the most concise souvenir ever published in this part of the country, and in presenting it, a word should be said of the brave but modest men who protect our homes from devastation, and who are as indispensable to us as the doctor who brings us back to health from the verge of the grave.

Always ready for duty when the sun rides the radiant sky at midday or at the solemn hour of midnight when rain and tempests sweep the streets and weirdly shriek around the gables beneath which citizens are wrapped in tranquil slumber. The firemen are called from their beds hurriedly and in the twinkling of an eye are dashing through the deserted highways to save property from the unbidden destroyer.

This is the life of the firemen day in and day out, and true appreciation is given to him only when the thinking man stops to listen to the startling clang of the gong or to the tall columns of smoke sweeping toward the sky above a burning building. We do not remember that our lives and property are in his keeping by day and by night, and on his coolness, his strength and his courage depends everything, and that while he is engaged in another vocation he is merely awaiting the call that requires him to take his life anew in his hand and hasten where danger waits. To him we owe much and our measure of thanks cannot be too full.

Equal credit should be given our very efficient police force. To this department we owe the protection of our persons as well as our property. They preserve for us law and order and protect the peace of our community. Under the able supervision of Henry B. Grevey, Director of Public Safety, each of these branches of the city's service measures up to the highest standards and deserves the respect and sympathy of all our people.

The help of the citizens of Hamilton has been solicited in making this Souvenir a success. And it is through their liberality which made this publication possible in bringing forth to the public the progress made in both of these departments.
